

The 20-year-old driver had been drinking. Both he and his 20-year-old passenger died. The public employee professionals at the Wisconsin Department of Revenue are working to prevent these tragedies.

It can be difficult to tell if someone is under the legal age to purchase alcohol. And it can be costly to be caught serving alcohol to someone under 21. There is an increasing need to inform the numerous members of beverage marketing associations, the countless licensed merchants, and the municipal governments that license them, about Wisconsin's liquor licensing regulations. That's why Roger Johnson, Wisconsin Professional Employees Council member and employee of the Wisconsin Department of Revenue, Alcohol & Tobacco Enforcement Section, provides training for tavern associations, beverage merchants, and law enforcement agencies on how to spot false identifications. The National Liquor Law Enforcement Association has named Roger its "Agent of the Year" in recognition of his efforts.
